It has often been observed that boller explosions occur in rapid succession at certain seasons of the year, and are com-paratively rare at others. At a recent meeting of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, it was stated by a lecturer that a very large proportion of boiler ex plosions—all, indeed, but the few which burst in the weakest place—occur in this country between the 1st of September and the lat of the following January, in the interval between summer and the time when the orgineer supplies feed-water heafed by waste steam. It is during that interval that the introduction of cold water produces the unequal expansion of the metal. Explosions, under such circumstances, occur most frequently in the boilers of locomotives. To prevent this, a device has been invented by which water is conveyed from the bottom of the boiler to the top by means of an automatic apparatus. In this way the feed-water supplied to the boiler i yet always of the same temperature as the
